

Brian

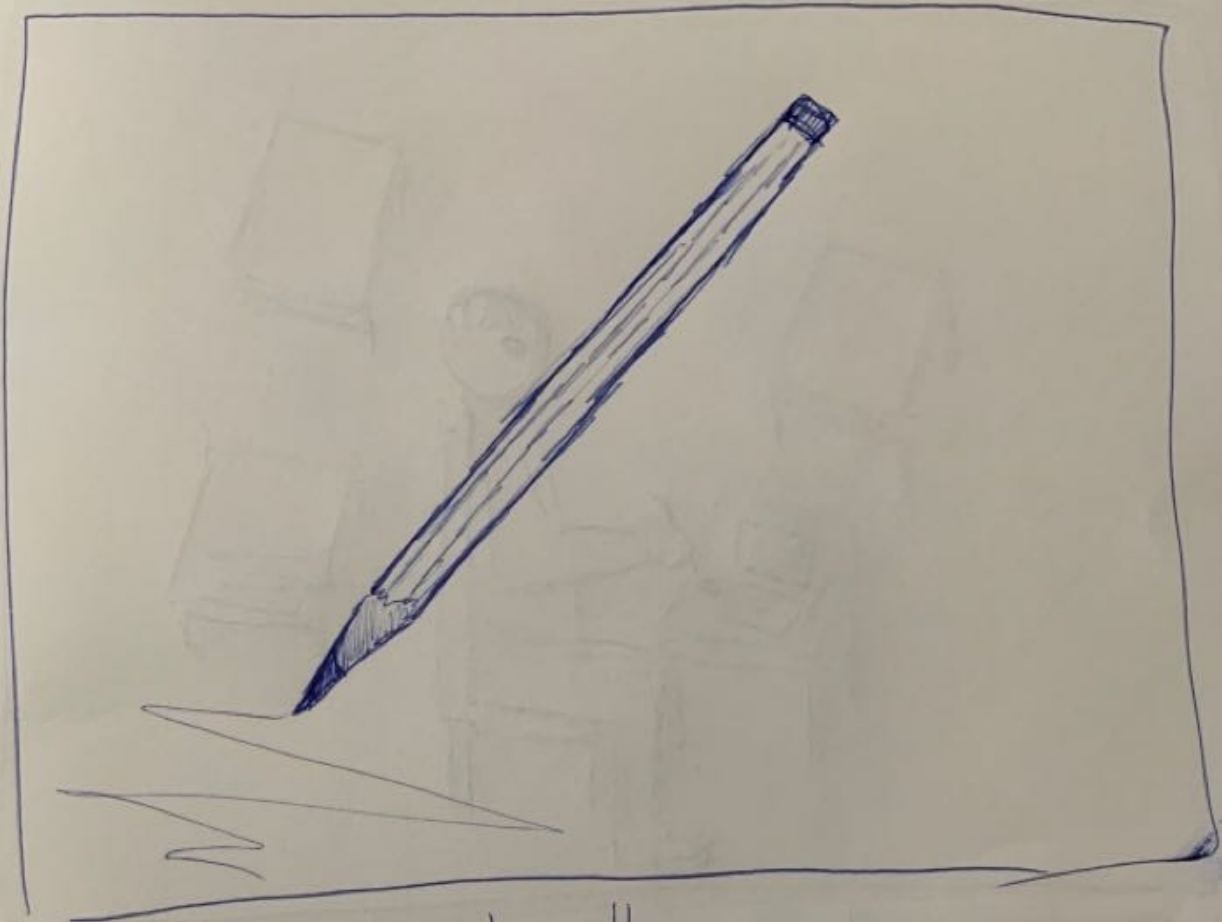

Chapter One

Brian was a friend I met in Elementary school, around grade 2 but maybe even earlier. We talked more and more, then we got in a class together in grade 5. We sat in a group with two others and this is when we started to talk even more. Us 4 started to work on a comic together, Brian did the main plot while the whole group worked on sketching and ideas for the story. The whole year we worked on that comic during class, recess and after school.

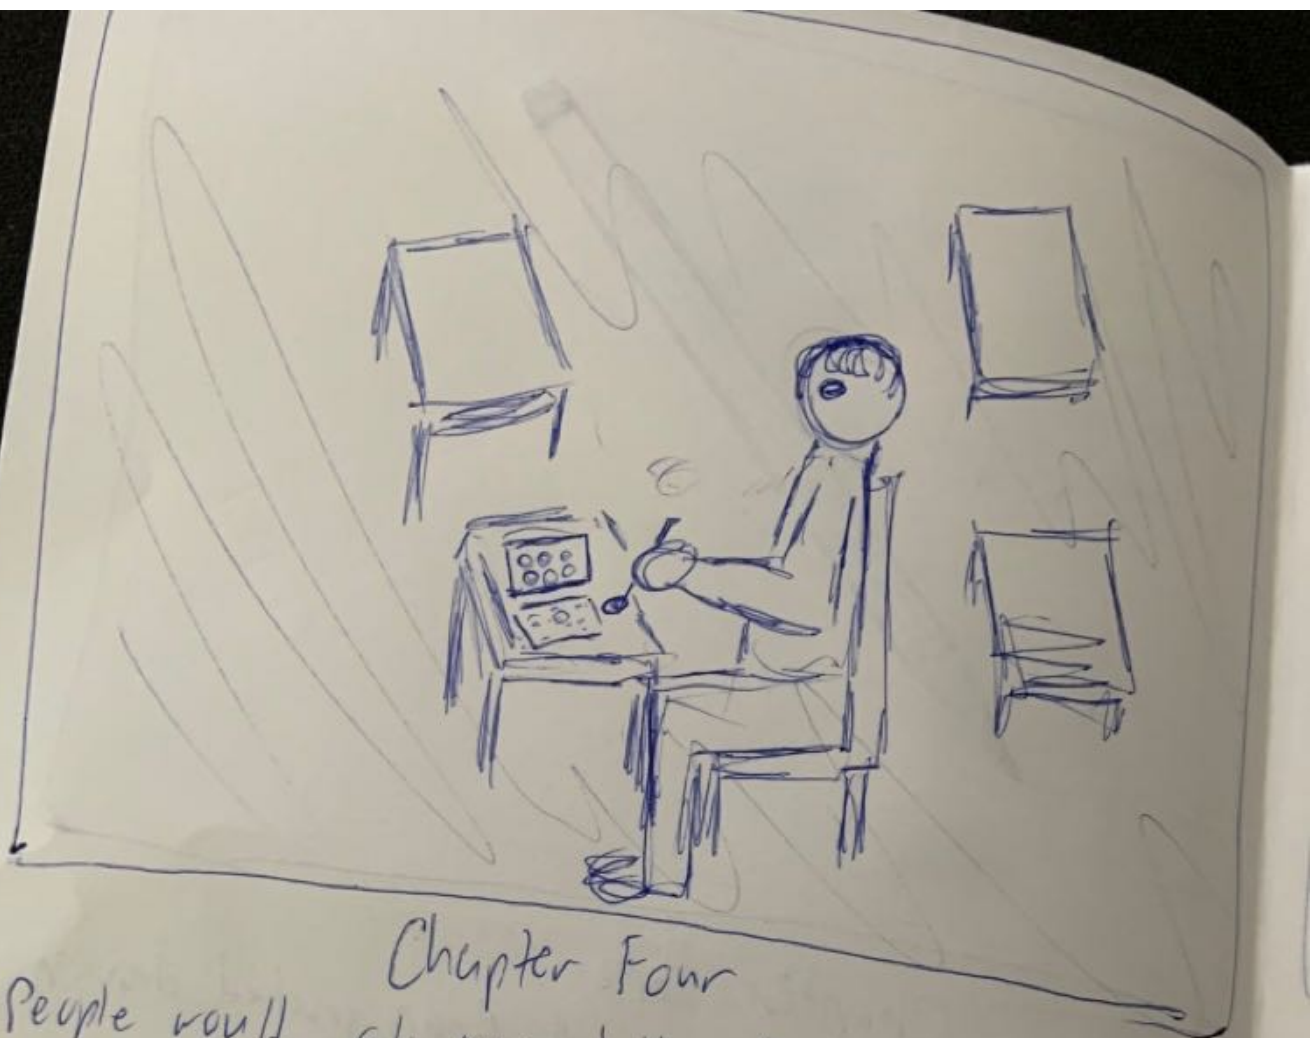

Chapter Two

When Brian was little he would often find time to draw. While drawing one time he dropped a pencil and that pencil ended up breaking. With no sharpener, he decided to instead just use the broken piece of lead to draw until class was over.

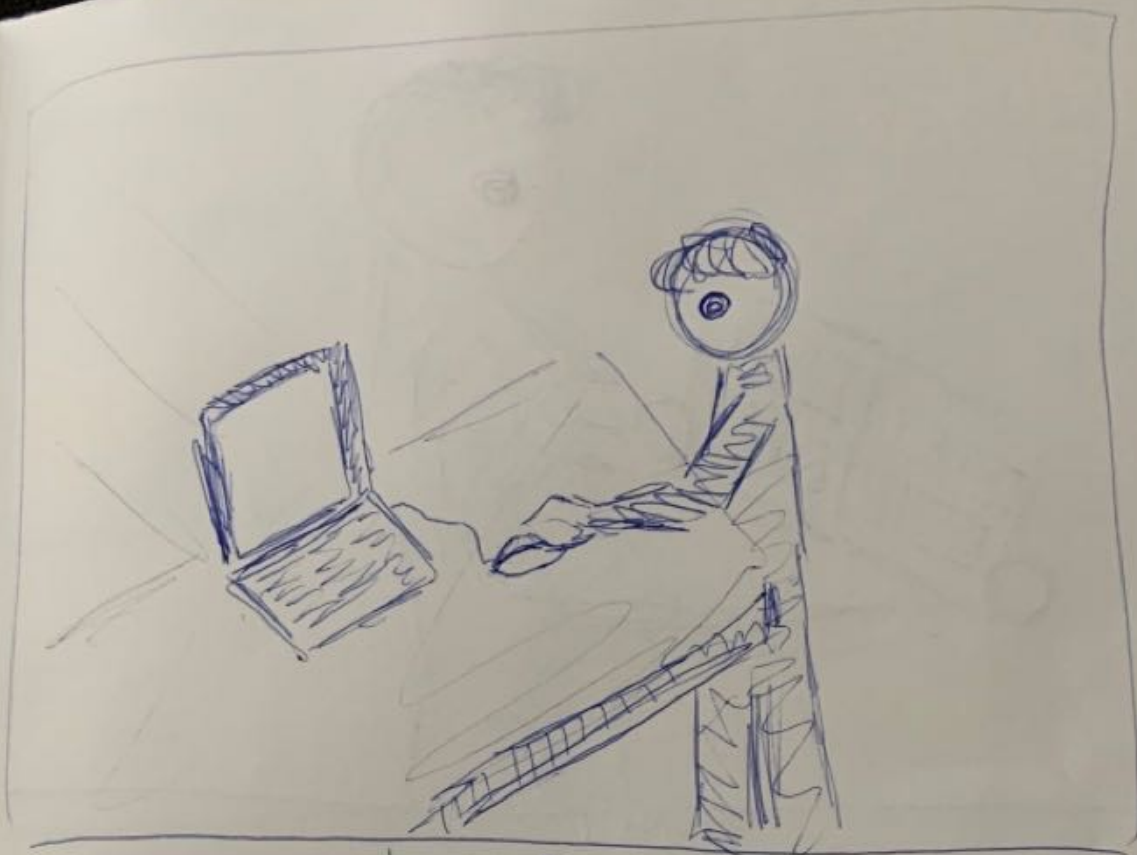

Chapter three

Most of my early memories with Brian involved drawing because we both really enjoyed to draw as kids. So most of my memories involve him with a pencil or a pen. I would often see him drawing during class or during free time at school.

Chapter Four

People would always talk well about Brian, he got along with everyone. From what I remember,
"Brian is awesome" was something I was told about him before I even met him for the first time.
This was way back in elementary school, but still to this day everyone I know talks well about him.

Chapter 5

Brian played video games a lot in his spare time, often story driven games. He enjoyed all types of games though and would play after school a lot.

When we were kids he would often recommend different games to play to us.

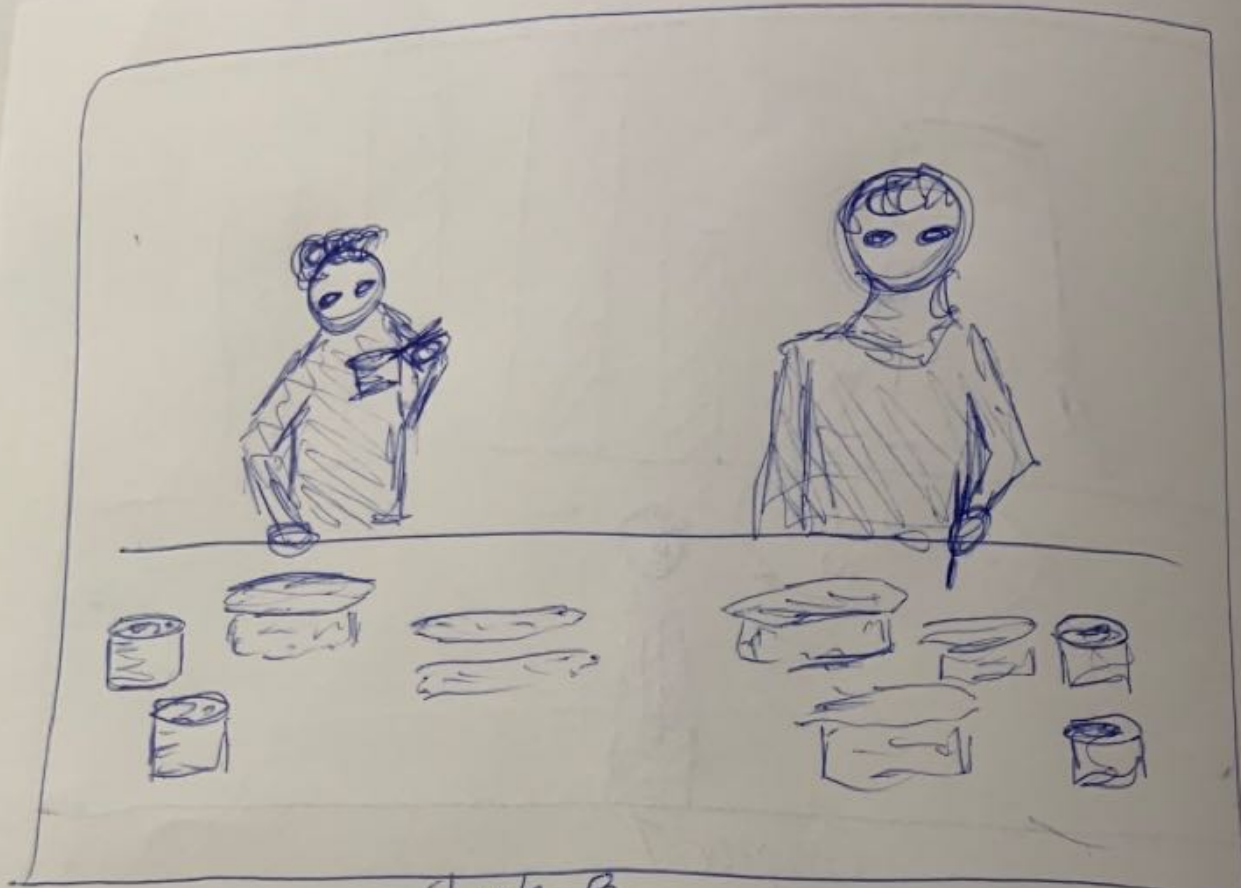

Chapter 6

Often when I read a good comic or manga, I will be reminded of Brian, because we would often talk about comics and manga that we read. Often we would tell each other to read a bunch of comics and manga while growing up.

Chapter 7

They once went on a trip to New York and all they wanted to do was eat the food there. Wearing a simple tee shirt and jeans he walked around New York city, searching for good food spots.

Chapter 8
Last time I saw him was when we went out to eat sushi together. Often we see each other over a meal or go out with a group of friends somewhere. Often we will get some snacks and catch up.
